WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- An Excessive Heat Warning has been issued for 11 am Sunday- 8 pm Monday for interior Northern California. High temperatures in the triple digits.
- An Excessive Heat Warning remains in effect for Sunday through Tuesday in much of the Central California interior, except the Excessive Heat Warning is now in effect through Wednesday in the Kern County desert areas as very hot temperatures are expected to last a little longer. Temperatures will continue to increase through the next few days, rising to around 6-12 degrees above normal during Sunday through Tuesday.
- A prolonged and dangerous heat wave will be likely for much of Southwest California through Thursday, and possibly longer. From Sunday through Thursday, there will be widespread triple digit readings across the valleys, lower mountains, and deserts. Coastal areas will also likely be very warm with highs from the mid 80s to lower 100's, with Downtown Los Angeles possibly approaching 100 degrees at times. This heat wave will also bring very warm overnight low temperatures for inland areas, especially the foothills and mountains., which will enhance the potential for significant heat impacts. The prolonged hot, dry conditions with very dry fuels will bring an extended period of elevated fire danger.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A building ridge of high pressure aloft will result in warming temperatures throughout the region for the next several days. Temperatures today through Tuesday are expected to reach 10 degrees above normal throughout interior areas, which means afternoon high temperatures generally between 95 and 105 degrees in most valley locations not impacted by the shallow marine layer. These afternoon temperatures will result in a moderate risk of heat-related illnesses, mostly for those groups that are particularly sensitive to heat. Overnight lows will help to provide some relief from the heat in the valleys, as clear skies and light winds will promote efficient radiative cooling and cool air drainage throughout our deep mountain valleys.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Overnight coastal marine clouds are forecast into Sunday, otherwise mostly clear skies through next week. A high will build in and the temperatures will soar to well above normal next week, peaking on Monday and Tuesday with possible records. The coastal regions under the influence of marine stratus are about the same temperature as yesterday, but it is five or more degrees warmer than yesterday away from the coast. Heat advisories for the mountains begin at 10am this morning. Stratus clearing looks to be on track per the previous discussion.
